

Stanislaus State looking into new Tracy campus

Staff reports Turlock Journal, August 27, 2025

California State University, Stanislaus and Ridgeline Property Group announced they are actively exploring an expanded presence in San Joaquin County at Pacific Gateway, a 1,500-acre master-planned, mixed-use development at the crossroads of Interstate 580 and State Highway 132. Together, the two institutions are evaluating the establishment of a Stanislaus State academic site in Tracy — a bold step toward broadening degree access through quality public higher education across San Joaquin County and the Central Valley. The vision for the Tracy academic site is to expand academic opportunities for students, support workforce development and foster public-private partnerships in one of California's fastest-growing counties.

The proposed site would bring Stanislaus State's nationally ranked, exceptional academic programming, workforce development, research initiatives and student support services directly to the Tracy area. A Tracy satellite campus will create new pathways for students and working professionals through hands-on learning, internships and other professional opportunities in collaboration with industry partners. The portfolio of programs will ultimately be designed to address regional needs and provide a differentiated experience from programs offered at Stanislaus State's Stockton Campus, thereby amplifying accessible higher education in one of the fastest growing regions in California. This opportunity will allow Stanislaus State to explore expanding on their strengths in business, agriculture and education and to develop strengths in areas such as cybersecurity and artificial intelligence.

"As one of the top 10 public universities in the country according to the Wall Street Journal's 2025 rankings, Stanislaus State is deeply committed to expanding access and opening doors for the students, families and communities we proudly serve," said Stanislaus State President Britt Rios-Ellis. "Rooted in the heart of the Central Valley, this opportunity to extend the promise of education at Pacific Gateway offers a visionary pathway to strengthen our regional impact and enhance access to higher education. We are grateful to the Sandhu Family and Ridgeline Property Group for honoring Stanislaus State with this opportunity. Establishing an academic site in the Tracy area within this dynamic hub reflects our mission to uplift communities through affordable, high-quality academic offerings that are responsive to local needs. The possibility of expanding to Tracy, with our existing presence in Turlock and Stockton, would provide a three-location solution designed to increase social mobility, fuel economic vitality and cultivate a culturally rich and resilient future for San Joaquin County and beyond."

“Stanislaus State’s interest in establishing a campus at Pacific Gateway is a pivotal moment for San Joaquin County. Stanislaus State, recognized as one of the nation’s top ten best public colleges, will bring quality, affordable higher education directly to our communities. San Joaquin County is rich in resources and is one of the fastest growing counties in the state. This investment would strengthen our education-to-employment pipeline, create and attract sustainable jobs, and support the long-term quality of life for our families. We look forward to partnering closely with Stanislaus State in the months ahead,” said 5th District Supervisor, Robert Rickman.

“We are thoughtfully and thoroughly exploring this opportunity to expand access to a CSU education in alignment with the area’s workforce and educational needs. This important first step reflects our ongoing commitment to serving the Central Valley and preparing the talent that will power the region’s – and California’s – future,” said California State University Chancellor Mildred García.

The Pacific Gateway site exploration aligns with Stanislaus State’s strategic vision to deepen community partnerships, raise educational attainment rates and meet workforce needs in critical industries across the Central Valley and California.

“We are pleased to partner with Stanislaus State to bring a college academic site to Tracy at Pacific Gateway. This collaboration underscores our shared commitment to provide accessible, high-quality education and foster economic growth in the region,” said Ridgeline Property Group Partner Steve Arthur. “Pacific Gateway, together with the generosity of the Sandhu Family, is honored to develop initial critical infrastructure, donate the University’s innovative inaugural building, situated on a 66 acre site to accommodate over 1.25 million square feet of future growth in a campus setting, and further provide a $20 million commitment for initial operations to establish a permanent educational presence in Tracy that will extend the University’s reach, uplift the region and augment the transformative power of education in the Central Valley for generations to come.”

Pacific Gateway — a center of connectivity, innovation and economic development at the crossroads of key transportation routes and economic hubs — would be anchored by the Stanislaus State Tracy academic site, adding a transformative educational dimension to its master plan. Please visit www.pacificgateway.com.

The University and Ridgeline continue to collaborate with local leaders, business partners and stakeholders to secure the community support necessary to ensure Stanislaus State’s success in Tracy. More details will be shared as exploration of the project progresses. If you’re interested in partnering with the University to support this effort can contact Vice President for University Advancement Catherine Wooton at (209) 667-3131.